MEARLY ASPHYXIATED TWO WOMEN

The Burgiars Overlooked Valuable Booty the House and Stole a Few Things of Little Worth.

Frank Waterman, a dealer in grain at Albany, moved into the old Fowler nomestead in Jamica avenue, Richmond Hill, L. I., about three weeks ago. He intended to remain there for the sum-mer. The Fowler homestead, a twoframe building with lawn and garden, is the first house westward on Jamaica avenue after crossing the Long Island Railroad tracks. In the house Saturday night, when the family went to bed were Mr. and Mrs. Waterman, their little giri, and Mrs. and Miss

It was just about 3 A. M. on Sunday when Miss Knight, lying half asleep and half awake in the heavy air, became aware of a stealthy creaking. The door of the room on the rear upper floor, in which she and her mother were sleeping. was open. So, too, was that of Mr. and Mrs. Waterman, across the hallway, at the front of the house. Miss Knight listened for a moment; there was a si lence, and then almost instantaneously the room was filled with a faint, sickly, sweet odor similar to that of over-ripe peaches. the room was filled with a faint, sickly, sweet odor similar to that of over-ripe peaches. She lay still for a moment, when, as it seemed to her, all things began to fade. A light flashed in her face. That broke the speil that held her face. That broke the speil that held her face. That broke the speil that held her face. There was a hurried scampering of feet down the stairs as Mr. Waterman, awakened by the screaming, jumped out of bed, and ran wildly around, without knowing exactly why. Miss Knight had turned to her mother, who was breathing in thick, stertorous gasps, "There are burglars in the house; they tried to chloroform us," said Miss Knight. Mr. Waterman i found his wife, too, in a kind of stupor. She was awakened with difficulty. The little girl was unaffected. Mr. Waterman and Miss Knight worked for five minutes over Mrs. Knight before they could restore her to consciousness. Then they went downstairs to investigate the burglary.

The thieves had left distinct traces of their presence. Footmarks showed how they had tried to get into the house by way of two open kitchen window, which leads right into the dining-room at the side of the house, was more successful. That they were not country artists was shown in the beautiful precision and neatness with which they had cut the window pane. They had used a diamond-shaped centre hit. Then with a long wire catch they had shifted the window-fastener from the inside, lifted the window-fastener from the inside, lifted the wire screen and stepped into the room. The footprints found in the grounds around the house.

But they were comparative beginners or they would never have overlooked the silver spoons and forks left lying on the breakfast table, to say nothing of the handsome candelabra standing on the sideboard, and the silver jugs, cruets and pitchers an unlocked cupboard near by. They had "tepped into a spare bedroom on the ground floor and stripped the bed of its clothing. They had then started upstairs to perform the chioroforming operation. One of the t

He was marching to chapel service with a number of fellow-prisoners when he suddenly threw himself over the railing. He landed on the stone floor in a heap. The keepers, fearing an outbreak, drew their revolvers and prepared for action. Not a prisoner, however, made any move. Wisemann was taken to the prison hospital and attended by a surgeon. Wisemann told his nurse that he had become tired of prison life and wanted to die. His term expires in the fall.

jog them through the park at the regulation six miles an hour, and then turn them loose in St. Nicholas avenue, to whirl him at a dizzy pace out into the country over the Harlem.

There are various roadhouses up in that direction where the fine gentlemen water their horses and get something to eat for themselves before their long drive homeward. Sometimes these drives are more reckless than the law allows.

Mr. Wells took an unufually long drive yesterday afternoon. He got a start on his homeward was last night, and he gave his fine sorrel: their head. At One Hundred and Fortieth street they were plunging down St. Nicholas avenue like mad.

There is an incline for ten blocks beginning there, and the horses' speed was accelerated as they went on. Policemen cried out warningly, but Mr. Wells did not slack up. They fairly whizzed along the faster, and when One Hundred and Twenty-fifth street, where crowds of people were passing to and fro, was reached people yelled "Slow up;" and cable car gongs clanged, but all in vain.

The wheels of Mr. Wells's vehicle almost leaped into the air as it sped over the tracks. Away in all directions scattered the crowd. But one man was too late. The horses were upon him before he saw his danger. They trampled upon him, and the people shut their eyes and shuddered as the wheels passed over his body.

Mr. Wells reined up his horses with a jerk. He leaped out and leaned over the man. Policeman Bay was there before him, and he sent the victim to the Manhattan Hospital. He was Frederick Gronro, of No. 622 West One Hundred and Thirty-third street. The wheels had passed over his head and legs, and the horses had stepped on his chest. They said at the hospital that his condition was very serious.

Policeman Bay arrested Mr. Wells, and two bystanders led the sorrels to a

Edward Finn, a butcher, of No. 211
Hudson street, had a pretty brown mare, which he drove for many years. It was his boast that she had never shed. Thursday he started to drive her to Morris Park, and when he struck the Madisson avenue bridge at Harlem River he found a tremendous jam.

Suddenly the little brown mare broke from the wagon and went dashing through the crowd. Her driver lay beneath the wheele of his vehicle. Policeman Timothy Donohue carried him to the gateman's house and waited for an ambulance. When it came it took Mr. Finn to the Harlem Hospital. No one could tell how the mare happened to Mrs. Finn was by her husband's side within an hour. It was a great strain.
